UK Outlook for Wednesday 31 Mar 2021 to Friday 9 Apr 2021:
Mild to perhaps very mild and largely dry in the southeast at first, with cloud and further spells of rain in the north. There are signs that high pressure will then build to the west of the UK clearing cloud and rain southwards through late Wednesday and Thursday whilst introducing colder and largely clearer conditions across the UK. This is likely to bring showers to the north and along the east of the UK with these showers turning wintry over high ground, especially in the north. Further south and west conditions will be largely dry with variable amounts of sunshine. Temperatures trending towards average to below average for the time of the year and feeling rather cold at times, especially when exposed to a brisk north wind.
